The poem "My Beloved Pakistan" shows deep love and pride for Pakistan. The poet says Pakistan is a very beautiful country. It has green fields, wide skies, and flowing rivers.

"Pakistan is not only a part of our body and soul but also the centre of our hopes and dreams."

The high mountains show strength and pride. The spirit of the nation is strong and full of hope. The poet describes different parts of Pakistan. There are snowy mountains in the north and hot deserts in the south. This shows the beauty and variety of the country. Every part of the land, including soil and trees, shows love and freedom.

"Our flag is a symbol of our freedom, a testament to our struggle, and a promise of our future."

The national flag is very important. Its green colour and white star shine brightly and give hope. The flag lives in the hearts of the people and makes them feel proud and united. The poem also praises hardworking people who serve the country. It teaches people to learn, work, and stay united.

2. TIME BY PERCY BYSSHE SHELLEY

The poem "Time" by Percy Bysshe Shelley describes time as a deep and endless sea. The poet says that the waves of this sea are like years that keep moving forward. This shows that time never stops and cannot be controlled by humans.

The poet explains that this sea of time is full of sadness and human suffering. Its water is salty because of human tears, which represent pain, loss, and difficulties in life.

"Time is a storm in which we are all lost."

This means that time is closely connected with human emotions and struggles.

Time is also shown as a powerful force that surrounds human life. It controls our birth and death, reminding us that life is short. The poet says that time destroys everything and throws the remains of lives and achievements onto the shore.

"The waves of time wash away the greatest achievements of mortals, leaving only memories on the shore."

This shows that nothing lasts forever.

The poem also tells us that time can be calm and peaceful, but it can suddenly become dangerous and frightening, like a stormy sea. This makes time unpredictable.

"We are all prisoners of time, drifting on a vast ocean we can neither measure nor control."

In the end, the poet asks who would dare to enter such a vast and dangerous sea. This shows that humans are weak in front of time. The poem teaches us that time is powerful and we must understand its importance.

3. THE ROAD NOT TAKEN BY ROBERT FROST

The poem "The Road Not Taken" by Robert Frost is about making choices in life. The poet describes a moment when he sees two roads in a forest and must choose one.

"In the space between two paths lies the freedom to create our own destiny."

He feels sad because he cannot travel both roads. This shows how people often face difficult decisions in life.

The poet looks at both roads carefully. At first, one road seems better because it looks less used and more grassy. But then he realises that both roads are almost the same. This means that many choices in life may look different but are actually very similar.

The poet chooses one road and decides to leave the other for another time. However, he knows that he will probably never come back.

"Every choice we make dictates the path we take, and every path shapes who we become."

This shows that once we make a choice, we usually cannot change it later.

In the end, the poet imagines that in the future he will say that he chose the road "less travelled by," and that it changed his life.

"Two roads diverged in a yellow wood, and I—I took the one less travelled by, and that has made all the difference."

This shows that our choices are important and can shape our future.
